Fall/Winter 2011/2012

From the Desk of the Directors

The newsletter in your hands was written in December, the “official” time of year for spreading moments of joy, tokens of love, and hopes of a peaceful tomorrow. For us, it is a period of the year when the swirl of tasks and peopled moments settles enough that we have time to reflect on our gratitude. This December, our gratitude is profound.

We are grateful for this political moment. We are grateful for those who, in words scrawled on cardboard or in orations echoed on the “people’s microphone”, have elbowed their way into the mainstream discussion. We are grateful, also, for the inspiration coming from popular uprisings across the seas.

Our most personal appreciation is reserved for all of you who lend a hand to move World Fellowship forward in this, our seventy-first year of becoming. The hands clasped together in our logo represent your active hands that do the work that needs to be done over and over again. We are thankful beyond measure for our good-spirited staff and volunteers as well as the presenters, performers and contributors who make it all happen in so many creative ways.

In this moment rife with both uncertainty and hope, we need our hands to be joining together and working together in ever wider circles. A project of the Institute for Policy Studies comes to mind; last summer, Chuck Collins told us about “Resilience Circles.” small groups which respond to economic insecurity by cooperating for mutual aid and social action. They are reminiscent of groups World Fellowship founders Charles and Eugenia Weller formed through the League of Neighbors during a period of comparable social upheaval in the early part of the last century. Indeed, there’s a way in which World Fellowship has always been sort of an extended Resilience Circle. It’s here that people recognize how we’re all in the soup together, and look for a way through it.

Our friend Beverly Woods, a frequent World Fellowship presenter and performer, recently spoke at the Unitarian Universalist fellowship in Tamworth about the Occupy movement. When discussing this time of societal transformation, she used an arresting metaphor.

According to Beverly, if you were to open a caterpillar’s cocoon partway through its transformation, you would not find something halfway between a caterpillar and a butterfly, such as a caterpillar with wings. Instead, you would find a messy mush, “caterpillar soup,” as the cells of the caterpillar need to be entirely disassembled and reassembled in order to complete the metamorphosis.

This political juncture is being defined by people who are no longer content to just put wings on the caterpillar. As Chris Hedges put it at Truthout.org, “Tinkering with the corporate state will not work. We will either be plunged into neo-feudalism and environmental catastrophe or we will wrest power from corporate hands.”

Every day, we receive news of World Fellowship folks who are figuring out how to do this business of “wresting power,” by occupying, getting arrested, organizing support rallies, or doing trainings so that the new activists can have the benefit of tools, tactics and lessons from past movements. We look forward to finding ways to offer ourselves to the service of this exciting movement, and we thank you all for the many ways you lend your hands to this work...and for taking your turn stirring the caterpillar soup!

Loving gratitude to each and every supporter – Your contributions of money, time, promotion, presentations, performances, and talent, all help promote social justice education, inspiration and action – in collaboration with nature and each other. Thank you for living the World Fellowship way by standing up for social justice and respecting all people. Staff and volunteers, donors, people who share our brochures and newsletters, who read and forward our emails, who wear our logo... Your support helps occupy the world and build true fellowship. Thank you for staying in touch, keeping connections, and forging new ones!

The Lowenfels-Beckett Dilemma

--Andy Davis

I was browsing not long ago in The Little, Brown Book of Anecdotes, and was pleased to come across a story about a significant figure in World Fellowship community history.

Walter Lowenfels was a communist poet and anthologist. He died 35 years ago, but his legacy survives here, as he's the father of Judy Jacobs, and the grandfather and great grandfather of a vibrant clan that gathers at World Fellowship each August.

Lowenfels was born in New York City in 1897 into a well-heeled family of butter merchants. After returning home after World War I, he went into the family business, but he also started writing poetry, which began to inexorably derail him from the capitalist track. In 1926, he decided that he needed to be part of the expatriate literary scene in Paris, so he went along with his soon-to-be-wife Lillian Apotheker, and fell in with a bohemian crowd that included Samuel Beckett, Nancy Cunard, Henry Miller, and Anais Nin.

During the time he was in Paris, Lowenfels was finding himself politically as well as artistically, and that's what gave rise to this story in The Little, Brown Book:

One day he was with Beckett, going on at length about his concern over the state of the world and his theories on the relationship between art and politics. Beckett nodded but sat silently for quite some time. Finally Lowenfels reached a peak of frustration and burst out, "You sit there and say nothing while the world is going to pieces. What do you want...what do you want to do?" Beckett crossed his long legs and drily replied, "Walter, all I want to do is sit on my arse and fart and think of Dante."

This exchange illustrates a phenomenon I've been looking to pin a name on for years, so I'm glad to be able to call it...the Lowenfels-Beckett Dilemma.

Last summer, as this line of thought was developing, historian Peter Eisenstadt came to World Fellowship and gave a talk on the lawn introducing Howard Thurman, the African-American theologian who was a critical link between Gandhi and the civil rights movement in this country. The next morning I went trolling for a "quote of the day" from Thurman, and fished up this:

"Don't ask yourself what the world needs. Ask yourself what makes you come alive, and go do that. Because what the world needs is people who have come alive."

For seventy years, World Fellowship has been providing an atmosphere in which people are able to discover what makes them "come alive." For some of us, this involves time spent on our backsides thinking about Dante...or whoever's version of beauty and/or truth moves us. So, yes, many are able to at least temporarily solve the Lowenfels-Beckett Dilemma, realizing that we don't have to choose between addressing the pressing issues of the day and feeding our own passions. At World Fellowship we can do both.

And, really, isn't that an ultimate goal of all our social change work, to birth a society in which everyone can fulfill themselves both as citizens and as creative individuals? As the Gorky quotation on the Uphaus Lodge living room wall says:

"Then we shall live in truth and freedom and in beauty, and those will be accounted the best who will the more widely embrace the world with their hearts, and whose love of it will be the profoundest; those will be the best who will be the freest; for in them is the greatest beauty. Then will life be great, and the people will be great who live that life."

You're invited! Place a brick on the walkway to the Schmauch Meeting Room

World Fellowship Center Celebrates the first 70 years!

From the 1941 founding summer's theme, 'In a time of war, prepare for peace', we've provided seven decades of educational programming in a unique wilderness environment for individuals, families, and movement organizations to reflect, recreate and re-energize. We appreciate the support each of you provides to help make this 'Second Home' of the progressive Left a continuing reality. World Fellowship is possible and it's happening in Albany, NH.

Over the past two years, your support has helped:

Hire professional assistance, resulting in:

- ◆ Completion of Facilities Assessment
- ◆ Life Safety Plan approved by local fire chief. Implementation of recommendations begun
- ◆ New database management software developed
- ◆ Website upgrade
- ◆ Draft Campus Plan created with input from community survey and board/committee discussions
- ◆ 2010 Financial Review conducted by independent Certified Public Accountant

Continue facilities improvements:

- ◆ Complete installation of Lloyd Lodge and Uphaus fire alarm system
- ◆ Complete repainting of Lloyd Lodge with shingle repair
- ◆ Complete construction for egress from dining hall, some Lloyd Lodge and Weller House rooms
- ◆ Farmhouse deconstruction completed
- ◆ Children's Fellowship building and playground upgrade
- ◆ Cleared additional land for growing organic vegetables; tractor purchased
- ◆ Continued forest management for species diversification and wildlife forage

Implement management improvements:

- ◆ Hired year-round Administrative Assistant/Office Manager
- ◆ Board of Trustees training and professionalization resulting in improved governance
- ◆ Gatherings held each weekend of the summer for Board members to Meet & Greet guests
- ◆ Successful summer educational program with expanded Recreation, Arts, and Body Movement
- ◆ Positive hospitality measures received in evaluations from summer guests
- ◆ Implementation of development initiatives improving capacity to fund overall improvements
